In two recent PLRs, the IRS determined that (1) the power of appointment (POA) granted to the grantor’s spouse under an irrevocable trust, as reformed by a judicial reformation, did not constitute a general POA over the trust assets and thus would not result in inclusion in the spouse’s gross estate; and (2) the judicial reformation of the trust to correct a scrivener’s error – to limit the exercise of the spouse’s POA to persons other than the spouse, the creditors of the spouse, and the creditors of the spouse’s estate – was not an exercise or release of a general POA so as to constitute a gift by the grantor’s spouse for federal gift tax purposes.
